The Old Lighthouse at Karang Beach

The old lighthouse at Karang Beach is one of the most fascinating landmarks in my hometown. Standing firmly on a rocky hill, the lighthouse has guided fishermen and large ships for more than fifty years. Although it looks simple from a distance, the building holds many interesting details.

The lighthouse is painted white, but the color has faded because of the strong sea wind and salty air. Its tall cylindrical tower is about twenty meters high, with a narrow staircase inside that leads to the top. From the balcony, visitors can enjoy a breathtaking view of the blue ocean and the golden sunset. Around the lighthouse, there are wild grasses and small bushes that move gently when the wind blows.

Inside the building, the atmosphere feels quiet and slightly mysterious. The walls are decorated with old photographs showing the history of the beach and the people who once worked there. At night, the bright rotating light shines across the sea, creating a beautiful reflection on the water. The sound of the waves crashing against the rocks makes the place even more dramatic.

Even though it is old, the lighthouse remains strong and useful. It is not only a navigation tool for sailors but also a symbol of hope and safety for the local community.

1. Why do you think the writer describes the lighthouse as a “symbol of hope and safety”?
2. How does the writer create a mysterious atmosphere inside the lighthouse?
3. How tall is the lighthouse?
4. If the lighthouse were no longer used for ships, what other functions could it have for the community?
5. Why is it important to describe both aspects in a descriptive text?
